

Dr. D. Jermaine Graham is a newly hired Assistant Professor in the Department of Applied Psychology and Rehabilitation Counseling. Prior to joining Coppin, Dr. Graham was an Assistant Professor at Western State University of Connecticut in the Department of Educational Psychology where he taught courses in the Education Administration and Leadership Doctoral Program. Dr. Graham has served other higher education institutions including Howard University and Prince George's Community College.

Dr. Graham research focuses on classroom motivation, social and interpersonal problems related to learning and behavior, and disorders that affect learning. In addition, Dr. Graham has also researched the impact of family involvement on academic achievement in schools. Moreover, he is committed to fostering children's development from multiple theoretical perspectives and translating current scientific findings to alleviate cognitive, behavioral, social, and emotional problems encountered in schools.

Dr. Graham earned two B.S. degrees in Sociology and Human Development from the University of the West Indies and Howard University respectively. Dr. Graham also received his Masters in Educational Psychology and his Doctorate in Educational- School Psychology from Howard University in Washington, D.C. Dr. Graham is a District of Columbia Certified School Psychologist and he also holds certification in Sign Language.